TRACING YOUR THREAD

A large part of storytelling for indigenous peoples is related to the thread that connects a person to their ancestors and to their future descendents. This requires both listening to stories and telling them.

Ask a family member who is a little older to share their favorite memory? After you've listened to their story, write what they said below. (If you need more room, you can always use notebook paper instead.) Now that story lives on in you!

TRACING YOUR THREAD

Now, think about your favorite memory and write that story on the lines below. Once you've finished, share it with a family member or friend. It might be nice to share with the person who told you their memory. Your story will now live within someone in your thread!
